FANCY.

In imitation of Moore.

'Twas on a Summer's day,
When pleasure's dreams were flying,
And blushing Sol's retiring ray
Upon the Lake was dying;
My fancy rove through many a grove,
And cool refreshing bower:
Horn'd in mind a wreath entwin'd,
Of many a roving flower.

I pluck'd the vermil Rose,
It smil'd so when I found it,
Then next the Evergreen I chose,
And to the chaplet bound it.
When Winter's storm in sadness come,
I went to view my flowers:
The Rose was gone—the Green alone
Retain'd its vernal powers.

THE ORPHAN BOY.

He wept—for deserted and long he strayed,
His little tears spoke the sad grief within:
He trembled at man, for he felt afraid
Even of his own shade—yet he knew not sin.

He crept to the lonely green mound, one morn,
Where his parents lay cold 'neath the willow-tree;
"Dear mama, he cried, will thou ne'er return
"To this wide world again and here live with me?

"No kind friends will take me since thou art gone,
"They shun me and say I am small and poor;
"I wish not to live for my hopes have flown,
"And I wander alone here from door to door."

The cold winds ruffled the foliage round,
The wild flow'rs about him would slowly wave;
A voice seem'd to come from the sacred ground,
As he knelt down, and died on his parents' grave.

SONG.

Tune—"Auld lang Syne."

What tho' the tear is in thine eye
And all thy hopes are flown,
What tho' thy bosom heaves the sigh,
And thou'st no joy thine own.

Dost remember that dear hour,
Which fond affection knew,
When thou wert glowing as the flower
Impearled with morning dew.

When o'er thy cheek of tempting hue
The sun of beauty beam'd,
And in thine eye of heavenly blue
The light of rapture gleam'd

And thou didst love—the purest flame
That ere in bosom burn'd,
And felt that thou hadst not a name,
For love like thine, pure one.

And oh believe me when I say
That thou hast truest joy,
In thoughts like this, whose brighten'd ray
No ills can e'er destroy.

What though the future owns no bliss,
And thou art fading fast
The rapture of thy heart be this—
The sunshine of the past! D.

To a Correspondent.

In this our age how difficult to write,
And own a muse inspired, nor yet profane,
For there are those will still denounce the wight,
Who, boldly glowing, dares to raise the strain;
And should that strain but swell a note too high,
Which true morality might blush to hear,
How hard his fate when over nice decry
The song but meant a few dull hours to cheer!
Be rigid, virtuous——virtuous, not wise,
Shall present joy, though transient is its ray,
Be changed for sorrow's unavailing sighs,
And damp with future cares the pleasure of to-day! D.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

'Twas evening—and the moon beam slept
So tranquilly upon the wide
And blue expanse of waters—that the tide
Scar'd from the usual vagrant roving kept—
Save, on its bank, the deadly night shade wept
Its poisonous tears, which fell on every side.

The tainting dews o'er the blue waters swept—
The Nereids of the stream fled to the caves,
Deep buried 'neath the clearest coldest waves,
And in the dark recesses shrunk and wept—
Nothing natives of the waters slept;
The lucid element was now their graves.

And thus it was with me—her smile
So brightly beam'd, and on my fancy play'd—
She knew the desolation she had made,
She spread her lure and caught me in the toil;
My heart to ruin darkly run the while,
While every hope, and every pleasure fade.

June 19. DARYMON.

Moral and Religious.

In nothing does the weakness of the human intellect appear more conspicuous than in the presumption which often characterizes its tone in its most mature state, and the inconsistencies into which it as often plunges. Human wisdom, in early days, while yet unaided by revelation, reared her alters to "the Unknown God," and, when the light of heaven burst upon creation, and the herald of the Gospel proclaimed on the mountain tops "whom ye ignorantly worship Him declare I unto you" Philosophy—the Philosophy of the world, turned in scorn from that sun of wisdom, and wandered on in darkness.

What are her theories? Here you may follow her down the long labyrinth of sophistry to the sage conclusion that there is no matter in existence—that the universe is made up of immaterial ideas, which, like morning dreams, body forth imaginary worlds, imaginary elements, imaginary beings, themselves but existing in imagination.—There you are invited to survey the worlds that roll in the infinitudes of space—and you are told that the being who created them cannot exercise a particular providence over all the works of his hands, because they are infinite in number. Another proves that the world existed twenty thousand years before the time of Adam—and a fourth argues from the philosophy of nature that there is not water enough within the compass of this mundane sphere to deluge the earth; and therefore scripture history is fabulous.

That knowledge which leads us from nature up to nature's God, is the noblest object an immortal being can pursue. The wisdom that sees, in man's creation, the benificence of his creator; in his preservation, the goodness of his preserver; and in his salvation, the love and mercy of his Saviour; that wisdom which teaches the power of the Eternal in the book of the unfolded universe, and his majesty in its glorious order and government, alone is wisdom worthy of rational creatures. All else is vanity and worse than vanity.

EXTRACT FROM THE SPY.

It is a painful discovery that we make, as we advance in life, that none of us are exempt from its frailties. When the heart is fresh, and the view of the future unsullied by the blemishes which have been gathered from the experience of the past, our feelings are most holy—we love to identify with the persons of our natural friends, all those qualities to which we ourselves aspire, and to all those virtues we have been taught to revere. The confidence with which we esteem seems a part of our nature; and there is a purity, thrown around the affections which tie us to our kindred, that after-life can seldom hope to see uninjured.

VIRTUE.—A SKETCH.

"The only amaranthine flower on earth is VIRTUE,
"The only lasting treasure truth"

WHEN the amiable and accomplished Lady Jane Grey was confined in the Tower, previous to her execution, she wrote to her friend Dr. Aylmer a letter containing the following beautiful passage: "There is an eternity for all that belongs to virtue, and what we have done for her will advance even to the sea, however small the rivulet we may have been during our life."

How expressively true!—the pure and unsullied stream of virtue will ever meander through life's chequered course to the boundless ocean of eternity and happiness. Cynthia may reflect her borrowed light—the Sun may revolve in his diurnal rotation, and his satellites irradiate our world with their splendour—yet the season will arrive when the voice that called chaos into symmetrical existence will consign these created luminaries into the abyss of their former darkness and oblivion. But Virtue will live beyond the shades of the tomb. She will soar beyond the bounds of creation, and be hallowed by the Holy Seraphim.

Without virtue, no man can be truly happy. There is no temporal pursuit—no pleasurable avocation in life unaccompanied by vicissitudes and disappointments. Every idle pleasure has its consequent sorrow. The foundation of actual happiness cannot be laid in a heart that engenders vice and immorality. Its basis is a good conscience; and a pure conscience is the infallible concomitant of virtue and religion alone. The wine cup, that exhilirates the senses for a short-lived moment, not only brings the melancholy reflections of a cooler judgment—but, when indulged in, licentiously, it proves the bane of every valuable and social blessing that belongs to the sanctity of character. Vice in every shape is illusory and pernicious. Virtue is the only amaranth. It is a gem that never ceases to sparkle—it is an attribute amiable to man and sacred to God. PASQUIN.

Guilt triumphant over Innocence,
OR THE
STORY OF EMMA SOMERTON.

To trace with accuracy the various circumstances that combine in furthering the web of fate into maturity, were perhaps pursuing a speculation we could, not with all our comprehensiveness, understand, nor our subtlety unravel, so nice and imperceptible are the gradations which lead to the development of the secrets of fatality. A celebrated writer has had occasion to mention the singularity that attends on human concerns of this nature, and very aptly instances some of the most common occurrences of human life, to show what a variety of chances must occur before the fulfilment of our greatest certainties can be assured: he observes, the seed being returned to the bosom of the earth, the rain must fall, and the sun shine before it shall attain that state in which only it is useful;—the wind must blow, and the merchant's sail be filled ere we can arrive at the possession of the means of gratifying our numerous wants: these are thus so many links that serve to the consummation of the chain of our physical necessities; and in the moral world the influence of these imperceptible agents is not less apparent.

If my reader is surprised at this digression, he will nevertheless pardon it, as the idea cannot but apply in some measure to the incidents it has been my endeavour to relate, and may prevent that monotony in story which is frequently entailed on the writer as well as peruser of narrative.

The singularity of that fate which should introduce Theodore to the assistance of his friend at the moment of peril will not be questioned, and a consideration of the consequences will make it appear still more singular: to account for it is only necessary to state, that he had been on a visit to a neighbouring family and was returning homeward with his servant, when the report of the pistol reached his ear, and the sound directed him to the spot. The astonishment of Theodore at meeting with Beldair at such a time and under such circumstances was only equalled by his concern for his unfortunate situation, which now seemed to require the tenderest offices of friendship as well as the more immediate duties of humanity: with the assistance of his servant he succeeded in raising the wounded Beldair from the earth, and seating him against a tree, which was no sooner effected than the servant was despatched to the village, to procure surgical assistance and the means of having him conveyed to the roof of his deliverer. The village was not far distant, and the necessary aid soon arrived: but for this timely assistance, this eventful night would have been the period of an existence which Beldair acknowledged was only preserved by the presence and assistance of Theodore. The surgeon found his wound dangerous, but delayed not a moment in extracting the ball, and declared that if great precaution was not used in his conveyance to the village, the termination of his journey would be fatal. Placed on a litter, the wounded man was borne slowly along, while in his heart he was silently execrating the untowardness of that mischance which had reduced him from the towering pinnacle of hope and expectation to the gloomiest depths of despair. The interdiction of his medical attendant who forbade him the use of speech, added to the harrassed and agitated state of his feelings, and contributed to put him in a frame of mind the most unfavourable to his present situation.

The procession was not long in reaching the mansion of Theodore, in an apartment of which Beldair was immediately accommodated, and every thing provided that was found conducive to his health and comfort. In the morning Theodore related the incident that had occurred, and his relation was greeted with the tenderest sympathy by Somerton and his lovely charge: the latter indeed betrayed more emotion than was compatible with the feeling of newly formed friendship, which was in a moment evident to the discerning eye of her brother, who felt already the tenderest alarm for the situation of Emma, whose grief and concern was the most unequivocal testimony that she considered her own safety as deeply interested in the recovery of Beldair as he himself could be, and all her endeavours to conceal her emotion were in vain before the affectionate eye of her grandfather and the discernment of her brother. When she retired to her chamber it was to give way to those feelings and indulge in the dear hope of his recovery: her heart had now made no scruple in avowing its affection, and its pulsations were now more violent as she flattered herself with the idea of his perfect re establishment in health. It was with difficulty she restrained herself from visiting his sick chamber, once again to lose herself in the contemplation of those features, the impression of which had been as forcible on her eye, as their expression had been on her heart; but she did restrain herself, and in calm solicitude awaited the event.

For several days Beldair remained in a most dangerous state. Theodore seldom quitted him, and his attentions were all that the most ardent and delicate friendship could inspire. Beldair was unceasing in his expressions of gratitude; in the manifestation of which it were impossible to say which had the greatest charm, the courtesy he displayed in making it known, or the apparent warmth and sincerity that seemed to characterise it. He made frequent inquiries after the health and happiness of Emma, whose presence, he observed, when the delirium produced by fever had subsided, would contribute more essentially to his recovery than the most skillful application of medicine: he begged the honor of a visit from her, and observed "Surely when she knows that her society will be such an antidote to severe indisposition, her gentle heart will recoil at the idea of prolonging an uneasiness rendered only unsupportable by her absence"—This was expressed in a manner in which levity was mixed with seriousness, though rendered perhaps still more impressive by the shortened breathings of pain.

In the olden time of chivalry and romance it was a custom by no means uncommon for the wounded knight, to expect all that attention from his lady's love, which would perhaps be incompatible with the genius of the present time, sadly divested of that portion of romance, which once constituted the distinguishing mark and glory of an age, now with its many appendages of gallantry and fanciful virtue rolled into the dark obscure of the past, leaving to us the remembrance only of "things that were" But Emma needed not the precedent of the past, nor the example of the present to influence her, and she gladly hastened to lose the remembrance of her fears in the contemplation of the object that caused them, and in the hopes of hearing their groundlessness confirmed from the lips she reverenced as the oracle of truth itself. She almost chided herself for remaining so long absent, but the period of insensibility was of all others, the one in which she least desired to view him, and this once over she was now most happy in the fulfilment of her intentions.

Her approach was welcomed by him with the smile of satisfaction, and he expressed his happiness in her presence in the most glowing terms: he related to her the few particulars of his disaster, and though languid his eye, its beams were those of love and rapture: "Bright sun of charity," he said "had the wounded of heart, the same consolation in the hour of distress as I have in thy presence, who am only wounded in body, 'twould brighten their hope of eternity, and make them bless the fatality of wounds, so delightfully cured." Emma blushed, nor could she help in her heart from almost censuring what she thought could hardly be sincere. Her brother remained with her in the room, and she felt his presence a relief to her: the conversation became animated: though weakened by severe sickness Beldair was still himself, and betrayed that versatility of mind which could be made subservient to any situation, and rise superior to all bodily infirmities, that so frequently dampens the brightest fire of the heart. Theodore could not but express his admiration of the character whose fairest shades were now developing to him; and his astonishment at that mental resolution which felt no changes from exterior, gave him the highest opinion of the most characteristic manliness. Emma felt all this, but her sensations were of the most delicate and lasting nature. From this shortened interview she retired, and ere she quitted the chamber she felt the full force of the appeal made to her by the eyes of Beldair.

As his sickness promised no very speedy termination, he felt solicitous on the score of public duty, of that importance not to be entirely neglected, but which might possibly be so, as the agency of others may relax from attention in the principal, and from example pursue a line of conduct disadvantageous to both. He regretted to Theodore the necessity of those reflections, who generously undertook to relieve him from them, by being himself the bearer of whatever commission he might find necessary to entrust him with: Beldair was not long in arranging his intention, and Theodore departed from the village upon an expedition he flattered himself would be useful to his friend.

The short period of his absence was eagerly employed by Emma in the discharge of some of the offices that were wont to be considered by Theodore as his duty, and this also allowed her an opportunity of being with him occasionally, as much to her own satisfaction as to his whose situation rendered any attendance necessary. With all his suffering, complaint seldom escaped his lips, and he seemed to unite the most unshaken constancy with that humanity which is peculiar to great minds when defying the efforts of pain; never betraying that peevishness of temper, which often makes disease still more insupportable, he was even at times lively to gaiety, and hid the convulsions of pain in the frequent smile of delight when conversing with Emma. "If," thought she, "he is so superior to pain as to defy its worst efforts, and can bear with fortitude unshaken its most malignant shafts, how exalted must be that soul when opportunity affords it a scene for action, and in the perfect re-establishment of itself, it is glowing in enterprize." This was the philosophy of a heart in which affection warranted conclusions that experience might not justify, but which taken in a certain sense, is perhaps not the less true: that Emma considered it so was her consolation.

Theodore at length returned, after completing the regulations necessary, much to the satisfaction of Beldair, and little less to himself, as he anticipated a longer stay on the part of Beldair, than might have been hoped, had the garrison of —— remained ignorant of the state of one of its most important officers—Not long after this the physician who attended Beldair was dismissed; medical attendance was no longer necessary; nature was again resuming her right, and her progress was rapid in the restoration of health: In a few days more Beldair was able to sit up, and was again one of the most distinguished guests that adorned the society of the happy family at ——, where, though an invalid, he was still not the less himself in all the charms of conversation and captivating manners. [To be continued.]

THE VILLAGE INN.

FROM BRACEBRIDGE HALL.

It was a rainy Sunday in the gloomy month of November. I had been detained in the course of a journey, by a slight indisposition, from which I was recovering, but I was still feverish, and was obliged to keep within doors in an inn of the small town of Derby. A wet Sunday in a country inn! whoever has had the luck to experience one, can alone judge of my situation. The rain pattered against the casements; the bells tolled for church with a melancholy sound. I went to the windows in quest of something to amuse the eye; but it seemed as if I had been placed completely out of the reach of all amusement. The windows of my bed room looked out among tiled roofs and stacks of chimneys; while those of my sitting room commanded a full view of the stable yard. I knew of nothing more calculated to make a man sick of this world, than a stable yard on a rainy day.—The place was littered with wet straw, that had been kicked about by travellers and stable boys; in one corner was a stagnant pool of water surrounding an island of muck; there were several half drowned fowls, crowded together under a cart, among which was a miserable, crest-fallen cock, drenched out of all life and spirit; his drooping tail matted as it were into a single feather, along which the water trickled from his back. Near the cart was a half-dozing cow chewing the cud, and standing patiently to be rained on, with wreaths of vapour rising from her reeking hide; a wall-eyed horse, tired of the loneliness of the stable was poking his spectral head out of a window, with the rain dripping on it from the eaves; an unhappy cur, chained to a dog house, hard by, uttered something every now and then, between a bark and a yelp; a drab of a kitchen wench tramped backwards and forwards through the yard in pattens, looking as sulky as the weather itself; every thing, in short was comfortless and forlorn excepting a crew of hard drinking ducks, assembled like boon companions round a puddle, and making a riotous noise over their liquor.

I was lonely and listless and wanted amusement. My room soon became insupportable. I abandoned it and sought what is technically called the travellers room. This is a public room set apart at most inns for the accommodation of a class of way-farers called travellers or riders; kind of commercial knights errant, who are incessantly scouring the kingdom in gigs, or by coach. They are the only successors that I know of at the present day, to the knights errant of yore. They lead the same kind of roving adventurous life, only changing the lance for a whip, the buckler for a pattern card, and the coat of mail for an upper Benjamin. Instead of vindicating the charms of peerless beauty, they rove about spreading the fame and standing of some substantial tradesman or manufacturer, and are ready at any time to bargain in his name; it being the fashion now a-days to trade instead of fight with one another. As the room of the Hotel, in the good old fighting times, would be hung round at night with the armour of way worn warriors, such as coats of mail, falchions and yawning helmets; so the traveller's room is garnished with the harnessing of their successors; with box coats, whips of all kinds, spurs, gaiters, and oil cloth covered hats.

I was in hopes of finding some of these worthies to talk with but was disappointed. There were, indeed, two or three in the room; but I could make nothing of them. One was just finishing breakfast; quarrelling with his bread and butter, and huffing the waiter; another buttoning on a pair of gaiters, with many execrations at "Boots," for not having cleaned his shoes well; a third sat drumming on the table with his fingers, and looking at the rain as it streamed down the window glass; they all appeared to be infected by the weather, and disappeared, one after the other, without exchanging a word.

I sauntered to the window, and stood gazing at the people picking their way to church, with petticoats hoisted midleg high and dripping umbrellas. The bell ceased to toll, and the streets became silent. I then amused myself with watching the daughters of a tradesman opposite; who being confined to the house for fear of wetting their Sunday finery, played off their charms at the front windows to fascinate the chance tenants of the Inn. They at length were summoned away by a vigilant vinegar-faced mother, and I saw nothing farther from without to amuse me.

What was I to do to pass away the long-lived day? I was sadly nervous and lonely; and every thing about an inn seems calculated to make a dull day ten times duller. Old newspapers smelling of beer and tobacco smoke, and which I had already read half a dozen times.—Good for nothing books, that were worse than the rainy weather. I pored myself to death with an old volume of the Lady's Magazine. I read all the common placed names of ambitious travellers scrawled on panes of glass; the eternal families of the Smiths, and the Jacksons, and the Johnsons, and all the other sons; and I decyphered several scraps of fatiguing inn-window poetry that I have met with in all parts of the world.

The day continued lowering and gloomy; the slovenly, ragged, spongy clouds drifted heavily along in the air; there was no variety even in the rain; it was one dull, continued, monotonous patter, patter, patter; excepting that now and then I was enlivened by the idea of a brisk shower, from the rattling of the drops upon a passing umbrella. It was quite refreshing (if I may be allowed a harkneyed phrase of the day) when in the course of the morning a horn blew, and a stage coach whirled through the street, with outside passengers stuck all over it, cowering under cotton umbrellas; and seethed together, and reeking with the streams of wet box coats and upper Benjamins.

The sound brought out from their lurking places a crew of vagabond boys, and vagabond dogs, with the carroty headed hostler, and that non-descript animal yclept Boots, and all the other vagabond race that infest the purlieus of an inn; but the bustle was transient; the coach again whirled on its way; and boy and dog, and hostler, and boots, all slung back again to their holes; and the street again became silent, and the rain continued to rain on.

In fact there was no hope of its clearing up; the barometer pointed to rainy weather; mine hostess' tortoise shell cat sat by the fire washing her face and rubbing her paws over her ears: and on referring to the almanac, I found a direful prediction stretching from the top of the page to the bottom through the whole month, "expect much rain about this time."

* * * * * * *

The evening gradually wore away. The travellers read the papers two or three times over; after which they one after another rang for "Boots" and the chambermaid, and walked up to bed in old shoes, cut down into marvellous uncomfortable slippers.

There was only one man left; a short legged, long bodied pottle bellied fellow with a very large sandy head. He sat by himself with a glass of port wine negus, and a spoon; sipping and stirring when nothing was left but the spoon.—He gradually fell asleep bolt upright in his chair, with the empty glass standing before him; and the candle seemed to fall asleep too, for the wick grew long, and cabbaged at the end, and dimmed the light that remained in the chamber.

The gloom that now prevailed was contagious. Around hung the shapeless and almost spectral coats of departed travellers, long since buried in deep sleep. I only heard the ticking of the clock, with the deep drawn breathings of the sleeping toper; and the drippings of the rain drop, drop-drop; from the eaves of the house."

The forty-sixth anniversary of the natal day of American Independence, was celebrated in this city, by every demonstration of joy and festivity which the occasion is calculated to inspire. The weather being exclusively warm, and the military having assembled earlier than usual, the parade was soon over, and the different corps adjourned to various pleasant retreats in the neighbourhood, where refreshments had been previously provided for their accomodation. Camden and Kaign's point, the most accessible and favourite resorts for parties of pleasure, was thronged by visitors. No occurrence that we have heard of, interfered during these rejoicings, to mar the social reciprocation of public feeling and sentiment which should ever distinguish the FOURTH OF JULY.

A new Novel by Miss Jane Porter, entitled BANNOCKBURN, being a Sequel to the Scottish Chiefs, and which, coming from the pen of this distinguished authoress, will doubtless offer many new and pleasing traits of national character, has just been received in this city, and may be had at the principal book stores.

U. S. SHIP FRANKLIN.

Letters from the officers and crew of the Franklin 74, have been received in this city. The melancholy fate of a boat's crew belonging to the ship, which is given in a postcript to one of the letters, will be seriously felt, as several of the individuals composing it held very distinguished stations in the Navy:

"VALPARAISO, March 22, 1822.

"I open my letter to add a melancholy postscript—Yesterday morning lieut. Perry, (brother to the late Commodore) second sailing master D. De Pau, midshipmen R. Marshall, J. Creamer, E. Potts, R. B. Coffin, and Reuben R. Pinkham and nine men, started in our first cutter on a shooting party—When they arrived at what they supposed the landing place, they attempted to stand in for the shore, when a heavy breaker struck the boat, and exposed her broadside to the sea, and the succeeding billow capsized her. Mr. Pinkham and one of the men were the only survivors—Every exertion has been made, though unsuccessfully, to recover their bodies. Not only the "star spangled banner" but every colour in port is half-masted, in token of sorrow and respect. Sir Thomas Hardy, on the first to show an example—with that true delicacy which ever distinguishes the man of fine feeling, he no sooner heard of the melancholy circumstance, than he paid this silent compliment both to the dead and the living, and was followed by all the others without distinction of country.—Lieut Perry, careless of his own life, died in the act encouraging Mr. Coffin, who was very young, to struggle against the opposing billows; but it had been written in the book of fate that neither of them should again meet the welcome of friends on earth. All of them were greatly and justly beloved. Their dying hours were unsoothed by the offices of friendship; no kind hand was present to close their eyes; no funeral retinue followed them to the grave; no prayers were offered up over their corpses—the roaring of the sea was their lullaby—ocean's deep bottom was their tomb."

Accounts written subsequent to the above mention that five of the dead bodies had been found and buried, but it was not known which they were.

Another letter from the same source, contains the following description of a perpendicular from the sea, that it reminds the beholder of Scott's description, where

"With peasant staff, one valiant hand
"Might well the dizzy path have mann'd,
"Gainst hundreds arm'd with spear and brand,
"And plunged them in the deep."

Were the South Americans endued with any spirit of enterprize, or in fact even possessed of common industry, this place would soon assume an agricultural rank and importance, equal, if not superior to any portion of country they now possess; but the God of indolence here reigns with supreme sway. Nine months have elapsed since the first settlement of the colony; yet, with the exception of their miserable huts, they have not made a single improvement, their only care was to provide food sufficient to sustain nature, which is easily effected, as fish and game abound, and through the foresight of former visiters, fruit and vegetables are abundant, and all excellent in their kinds. Here, in the latter part of January, are peaches, cherries, strawberries, figs and peas, in perfection. In the vallies, innumerable quantities of radishes and carrots are found.—Oats and timothy have also been sown, and thrived well, consequently their grazing cattle are fine and fat.—These consist of wild horses, cattle, goats and hogs, some of which they have partly domesticated.—After remaining here three days, we were joined by the schr. Dolphin, from whom we had parted company in doubling the cape, and our storeship the Canton. After painting ship, watering and wooding, we set sail for this place, thinking that we were taking a last farewell of our colonial acquaintance—when lo! scarce had we been a week in port, when an English whaler arrived, freighted with the whole colony, and the Governor immediately paid us a visit, so that poor Juan Fernandes is again reduced to an uninhabited isle."

TREATY OF GHENT.—Gen. Peter B. Porter, and the Hon. Anthony Barclay, Commissioners under the 6th article of the treaty of Ghent, together with the agents and secretaries, having met in Oneida, (N. Y.) after a session of four days, concluded amicably the matters submitted to their arbitration. Nearly 3,000 Islands have been surveyed and adjudicated upon, many of which are of great value and national importance.

FROM VALPARAISO.—We learn by the arrival of the Carolina Ann at New York, from Valparaiso, whence she sailed on the 29th March, that the U. S. frigate Constellation, Capt. Ridgeley, had just arrived from Conception, and would sail for the United States in a few weeks. The Franklin 74, Com. Stewart, was still lying there, and would not probably sail till after the departure of the Constellation. The schr. Dolphin, lieut. Conner, sailed on the 17th of March for Conception, and was momently expected back.

Lord Cochrane was at Chiloe waiting for the shipping which was fitting out at Valparaiso. It was reported that two Spanish frigates had surrendered to him, off Chiloe, without firing a gun.

The pirate Benebedas was actually shot at St. Jago de Chili, on the 14th or 15th of February.

We have heard that in consequence of the careless manner in which gunpowder was laid, in paper parcels of a pound each, by some persons at Point-no-Point, on the 4th inst. one of the parcels was exploded by the wadding of a gun, and the whole of the powder was blown up. One young man, who was about to take up one of the paper parcels, has been dreadfully injured about the head; many others were slightly wounded. [Press.

New-York, July 4.—Last evening as some boys were playing on the bridge which leads to the gate of the Nautilus Steam boat office, one of them apparently about 6 or 7 years old, fell into the rapid tide which passes under the bridge, and was immediately carried out of reach into the basin.—A man named Richard Varick, plunged into the water with his clothes on, swam to him and brought him, with great exertions, safe to the wharf.

WHITE FISH.—Last fall a gentleman in this city sent a barrel of White Fish to a friend in New-York, from whom he has recently received a letter, in which the highest commendation is given to the fish—those who had an opportunity of tasting them were of the opinion, that in flavor the far exc[illegible] shad W[illegible]

FROM THE NEW YORK COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER.

MECHANICS.—The articles manufactured by the apprentices, and exhibited on Thursday for premiums, were sold at auction, at prices extravagantly high. We examined the articles, which consisted of various kinds for which premiums had been offered, and were highly pleased with the neatness and even elegance, with which nearly all were manufactured. In addition to the rewards offered in the papers, about one hundred dollars was subscribed and distributed in discretionary premiums. Such exhibitions, we believe, will have a fine effect in stimulating apprentices to use every exertion to arrive at the highest degree of excellence.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ARIEL's first Criticism, which we suppose are introductory to others that he has in view, have been deferred until next week—in the mean time, it is expected he will furnish us with the succeeding part.

THE MEDLEY, No. 3, will be inserted as soon as we can afford room for its great length.

RYNO shall have a place next week.

THE HOUSEMAN OF OLD TAPSON, of which we have three numbers on our files, will be attended to shortly.

THE TESTIMONY is acceptable.

Will MONMANY inform us whether the lines to M— are original or selected?—We will thank our correspondents, when they send us productions of any kind, when are selected, to mark them as such.

PASQUIN, to whose attention our readers have of late been indebted for several choice effusions of Poesy, has given us a short but sufficient testimonial in this day's Post, of what we had before but partially been made acquainted, that his prose is not inferior for its chasteness and pleasing effect upon the mind, to his other compositions—and it is hoped, he will indulge us in a desire we have of becoming better acquainted with it.

PUBLIC SALES.

BY COMLY & TEVIS, Auc'rs.

No. 73 MARKET STREET.

On Wednesday morning, at 9 o'clock, on a credit of 60 days, for approved notes,

A large assortment of fresh imported and seasonable DRY GOODS, in lots.

Also, a quantity of Domestic Sheetings, Shirtings, Cassimets, &c.

DRY GOODS.

On Saturday morning next, at 9 o'clock, will be sold, on a credit,

An extensive assortment of DRY GOODS, suited to the season.

CAUTION.

AS the season is advancing that brings with it all the local diseases, that is common to hot climates and weather, such as Cholera Morbuses, Bowel Complaints and Bilious Affections. The Medicines for the above complaints that I have formerly prepared, I am not in a situation to accommodate the public with this season. I have therefore availed myself of the opportunity of communicating to Mr. RICHARD JORDAN, Apothecary, the knowledge of preparing my medicines genuine, so that those persons who know the merits of them need not be at a loss to procure them as chaste as they formerly have been received from me.

JOSEPH HAWKINS.

The subscriber having the most implicit confidence (from his knowledge of the efficacy of the aforesaid Medicines,) feels no hesitation in recommending them to the public.

Philadelphia Directory—for 1823.

THE public are respectfully informed that the subscriber has made arrangements for the publication of a Directory, at the commencement (say first month) of the ensuing year. The orthography, which has heretofore been the source of so many errors, shall be particularly attended to, and every exertion used to make it correct. Having, during the last 25 years, been more or less engaged in a manner conducive to a thorough acquaintance with the materials of what ought to form a correct Directory, the Editor presumes his present undertaking will be found, at least inferior to none of his predecessors. He disclaims all participation in former Directories, as well as Supplements, Second Editions, &c.

It would be altogether useless to say any thing relative to the utility of a Directory—no house, public or private, should be without one, much less those in business.

Any subscriber on pointing out a mistake (making allowance for the time at which the name was taken) may return the book and receive his money.

It is supposed that the work will contain near 600 pages, and delivered to subscribers at $4 50 per copy. No more copies than are subscribed for shall be struck off.

"PERFECT BULLS."

Pope in his translation of Homer in speaking of an eagle and her young, says,

"Eight callow infants fill'd the mossy nest,
"Herself the ninth"

Also in his Essay on Criticism:

"When first young Maro in his boundless mind
"A work t' outlast immortal Rome design'd"—

Dryden sings,

"A horrid silence first invades the ear."

Thomson also sings,

"He saw her charming, but he saw not half
"The charms her downcast modesty concealed."

Virgil also knew how to make a bull.

"Moriamur et in media arma ruamus"
"Let us die and rush in the middle of the fight"

But the PRIZE BULL belongs to Milton, who in his Paradise lost sings,

"Adam, the goodliest man of men since born
"His sons, the fairest of her daughters, Eve."

FROM THE NEW HAMPSHIRE SENTINEL.

Grinding the face of the Poor.

The New-York Missionary Register has published a letter from a Mr. Bliss to the Treasurer of the United Foreign Mission Society, enclosing 11 dollars, handed him by the Rev. A. Peters, of Bennington, from a "labouring man, with a request that he would transmit it, and conceal his name." This poor man, it seems, saved 75 cents by working on the 4th of July—1 dollar by not wearing a neck handkerchief—1 dollar by denying himself and family the use of ardent spirits—$1,25 by having his fulled cloth only coloured, not dressed, and another item of four dollars by wearing, himself and family, thick shoes. The motive for publishing, as avowed by the editors, is, "that others may be induced to follow so worthy an example." I have often been led to think, that those who so pertinaciously hold the doctrine that the heathen in India must be eternally lost for "lack of knowledge," in their sense of the term—i. e. lost forever, unless individuals of a more enlightened nation, 10,000 miles off, contribute money to support such preachers as their sect select, the abettors and supporters of such a delusion were doubly guilty in not setting a proper example to others. We don't see them wearing cowhide shoes summer and winter, working independent day, wearing coarse cloth undressed, going without a handkerchief, (to say nothing about ardent spirits,) and denying themselves the comforts of life, to enable them to send money to India. No, no. They leave it to this poor man, who doubtless believed literally their declarations, to set the "worthy example."

This man wished to have his name concealed. The editor of the Bennington Gazette informs that, while thus "doing penance and starving his body," he sold a piece of land and took his pay, but before the grantee could get his deed recorded, a creditor of the donor attached the same piece of land, and secured his title, leaving the honest purchaser without remedy.

This simple relation is not recorded to discourage missionary contributions—far from it. But to show the effects of holding out improper motives to action. I say boldly, that those who believe in their hearts, as Mr. Newell once wrote home from Bombay, that "whole nations were sinking into hell" because they have not the knowledge of the Gospel, ought to deny themselves the conveniences of life, and live sparingly on the necessaries; that if, in fact, the cow hide shoe pinches, they ought in summer to go barefoot! This man had no right to devote the proceeds either of his labour or economy in this way, to the injury of his family or his creditors. Let those who have and to spare, contribute as their consciences dictate. Heaven is not to be bought with money. We have heathen to convert, and worse than heathen at home to reform. I trust the nearly exploded system of urging contributions from the motive which probably influenced this poor man, will be followed by one more rational and enlightened, and more worthy the character of a just as well as merciful Creator.

FROM LATE ENGLISH PAPERS.

Disturbances still continued in Staffordshire and other towns in England. The miners refused to go to work at reduced wages. The cavalry had been called out repeatedly, and several of the rioters had been fired upon and wounded.

Intelligence from Constantinople, states that the Sultan had not ratified the treaty concluded between the Pacha of Bagdad and the Prince Kerman Shah, and had sent 14,000 men against the Persians.

It is mentioned that Mahomet Pacha, one of the Generals under Chourschid Pacha, had gone with 12,000 men, to march against the Morea. A fleet was to sail from Constantinople with troops against the Morea.

The Isle of Scio was taken on the 22d March, by 3000 inhabitants of Samos, after a bloody struggle. The Turks were infuriated at the capture.

Mr. Owen calculates that the labour of 400 millions of workmen would be required to produce the British goods of all sorts now manufactured with the aid of machinery.

The Algerines have rejected the late Spanish overture, and hostilities are expected against the Spanish shipping.

FROM FRANCE.—The Greeks, after several hard fought battles, had taken possession of the Island of Negropont in the Levant. The Greeks are said to be successful and gaining ground on all sides. The provisional government had been removed from Argos to Corinth in the centre of Greece, and a declaration of independence and a new constitution promulgated.

Dr. Macartney, of Dublin, has for some time employed a solution of alum and nitre for the purpose of preserving anatomical preparations. He finds that it preserves the natural appearances of most parts of the body more completely than spirits, or any other fluid hitherto used.

WEATHER.—As an illustration of the singular character of the last winter, it may be mentioned, that while the thermometer was some degrees above freezing in Russia and Sweden, they were skating and driving traineaux at Madrid through the whole of January, and several persons were frozen to death in the streets of Lisbon.

Lights and Shadows, a series of short Tales descriptive of Scottish manners, and about appear, is highly spoken of in certain literary circles.—L. Gaz.

A respectable shop-keeper of Cork, named Roger Hefferman, has been transported to Botany Bay for seven years, for selling a few pounds of gunpowder to the insurgents in Ireland.

England derived 200,000*l.* profit from Lotteries last year.

A man had been fined 200*l.* for exposing a gambling table in the streets, at a fair, in England.

Several artificers had been arrested in England; they were preparing to go to France, where more liberal offers had been made them.

An unpublished collection of poems, by Thomson, the author of the Seasons, in his own hand writing, are to be sold at auction.

DUELLING.—The Earl of Westmeath, has been sentenced to three months imprisonment in the King's Bench Prison, to enter into recognizances in the sum of 2000*l.* and to find two sureties in the sum of 500*l.* each, to keep the peace for three years, in consequence of sending a letter to a gentleman named Woods, tending to provoke a challenge to fight a duel.

A Court martial has been holden in Dublin, on a Captain of the 1st Dragoon Guards, on a most extraordinary prosecution. It seems that a restive horse had been prohibited from being sent out on a detachment, that his Captain had sent it out, and that the man who rode it, was in consequence, drowned. [Limerick Chron.

prevent his expected fall. He saw them: mistook them for bailiffs, ran rapidly along the roof of Mr. Wallace's stores, proceeded to that of Mr. John Quinn's stores, over which he rushed with as much security as a sharp-clawed cat, or muscular ourang-outang, till he came to the gable, from which he jumped, with dauntless intrepidity, upon an adjacent dwelling-house, a descent of about (we believe) eight feet, imagining, no doubt, it was neck or nothing with him.—From thence he proceeded to Mr. Smith's roof, where he stripped a portion of the chimney of bricks, and squeezing himself into one of the funnels, pelted the people who wished to secure him, with these missiles, so long as his supply lasted. In this situation he was seized, secured with ropes, and lowered down to an immense multitude of the market people, who were gazing with astonishment at the funny gambols of the frisky frisseur.

UPPER NILE, &c.

Extract of a letter from an American gentleman to his father in Boston, dated

"MALTA, April 16, 1822.

"By my last, [June 20, 1822.] you know that I was on the point of accompanying Ismael Pacha to the conquest of the countries on the Upper Nile. The expedition was crowned with the most complete success, and has laid open to my knowledge a superb country, and will occasion no small acquisition to the Geography of Africa. I cannot, in the compass of a letter, which I am obliged to make a short one, inform you of my adventures in this romantic and fortunate expedition. My journal of it has been sent to England for publication, and copies of it may possibly reach America in two months. I have had the honour of contributing to the success of a most extraordinary expedition, which has been singularly successful, and of being the first civilized man that was ever on the banks of the Great Bahiral Abiad, which we have ascertained to be the main branch of the Nile, and probably the Niger. The singularity of it having fallen to the lot of a native of the new world, attaches, in the opinion of Europeans, no little honour to myself, and I hope will bring some to my country.

A novel instance of the infinite contrivances and combinations of roguery was evinced on Saturday last, in New-York, near the Albany Basin. A respectable man, with something more than $370 of paper money in his pocket book, a part of which he had just received, while engaged in business at the place mentioned, dropped his treasure, or at any rate parted with it from his pocket. Presently a cartman hallooed to him, and asked him if he had not lost his pocket book? Putting his hand to his side instantly, he discovered that he had. "Well," said the cartman, "I saw that negro fellow going along yonder, pick one up." The black fellow passed deliberately on his way till the gentleman overtook him, as he walked along—however, deliberately overhauling the pocket book, and finding as he says, only nine cents in money in it, then coolly threw it down.—There appeared scarce a possibility that he could have disposed of the money undetected. The adroitness of the villainy lay with the cartman, who seeing the pocket book fall, opened, rifled, and threw it down again, and then watching the next passenger, who, he concluded, would very probably pick it up, handsomely turned off the guilt from his own shoulders: besides, the cartman immediately made off, and is not known.

An accident occurred in New-York last week which terminated in the death of a very promising youth, son of Mr Gildersleeve. He was riding a hard-headed horse, which, taking fright, carried him full speed through the streets, till he got to the place where he had been stabled, when he would probably have stopped, had not, unfortunately, a black man, seeing the boy's apparent danger, interfered to aid him. It was the work of an instant. The negro, at the expense of one leg broken short off in two places, and other severe contusions, had already hold of the reins. The horse brought suddenly up, the poor boy was dashed headlong forward with violence upon the pavement; the horse, too, falling and plunging forward, came down upon him with enough force to crush a giant; and the unfortunate youth barely survived in suffering till the next morning.

Bank of the United States.—This institution has divided 4½ per cent. for the last six months.—At a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on Monday last, Mr. Cheeves intimated his intention of retiring from the office of President, at the expiration of the present year. Mr. Gallatin is already spoken of as his successor.

A lad about 15 years old, fell overboard from the ship Halcyon, Capt. Woester, of Philadelphia, on her way up James River, about 40 miles below City Point, on Thursday of last week, and was drowned.

THE SHAKERS.—It has been decided in Kentucky, that the law which authorized the imposing fines by a court martial, on the Shakers, for not attending ordinary musters, is unconstitutional and void, as the religious tenets of that society forbid them bearing arms; and the property seized by the sheriff for such fines, was restored.

A new and extensive ship-house has been erected at the Navy Yard in Boston, for the purpose of containing within its spacious area, a new line of battle ship, the ribs of which are now preparing.

Governor Branch of North Carolina, has declined accepting of the office of a Judge in West Florida, to which he was lately appointed by the President and Senate of the United States.

Singular!—On Friday week, at the peninsula of Nahant, as two ladies were walking on Pea Island, they observed at nearly low tide, a large fish flouncing among the rocks. They approached and discovered it to be a large Sea Bass. They seized upon and dragged the fish out of the reach of the tide, and then dispatched some men to bring it home. This great Bass weighed nearly 60 lbs

A keel boat was lost on the Missouri, about the 1st ultimo, with property on board worth $10,000, belonging to Gen. Ashley. She sunk suddenly, after striking a snag, and it was with difficulty that the hands were saved.

George M'Glassin, Esq late of the army, and formerly of Philadelphia, has been appointed by the President of the U. States, Surveyor and Inspector of the Revenue for the port of St. Johns, district of St Augustine.

A sail boat with four men on board, was upset in Boston harbour, on Monday last, and three of them were drowned.

The brig Gov. Hopkins arrived at Providence, (R. I.) last week from Havana, and was put under quarantine. Her former captain (Andrews) died in the Havana. Capt. Rogers, who succeeded him, died on the 17th ult.—the mate, Mr. Bryant, died on the 18th, and another, the next in command, has since died.

After an unusual drought for the season of the year, New-Brunswick, N. J. was refreshed with copious showers on Monday and Tuesday last. The Millstone and Raritan rivers, in consequence, have rose to a considerable height, overflowing their banks, and doing, we fear, much damage to the harvest on the low land.

Public Sale.—The entire cargo of the ship Huron, from New South Shetland, consisting of about 10,000 prime fur seal skins, and 24,000 gallons of oil, are advertised for sale on Wednesday, the 10th of July, at New-Haven, Conn.

AN OLD FISH.—It is stated, that a fish, weighing from 50 to 60 pounds, and corresponding in every respect with the description of the one lately caught in the waters of New-Jersey, came on shore near the Slate Rock, on Sekonk River, during the thunder storm on the night of the 20th inst. Some of those who examined it took it for a Mermaid.—Prov. Pat.

COUNTERFEITERS.—A daring gang of counterfeiters, has been discovered in Alabama, who, to avoid detection, carried on their manufactory in a cavern, situated in a sequestered and solitary wilderness, in a remote part of the country, about a hundred miles from Tuscaloosa. They were surprised, however, at their "honorable" employment by twelve or fifteen gentlemen, who set out from the last mentioned place for the purpose of ferreting out this den of public depredators. In the den there was found, the whole apparatus in full operation, consisting of a paper mill, plates, engraving implements, and every article necessary for carrying on the business on an extensive scale. Two of the gang were in a log house. They were armed with guns and refused admittance for some hours, 'till the patience of the party could no longer brook delay, and they threatened to fire the house; on which, the inmates surrendered and were afterwards committed to jail for trial. So complete was the surprise, that 500 two dollar bills on the Planters' Bank of Georgia, just worked off, but not signed, were found as they fell from the press.

FROM THE LIVINGSTON (N. Y.) JOURNAL.

The Farmers vs. the Wool Carders and Clothiers.—Some time since the wool carders and clothiers in the county of Monroe, held a convention for the purpose of enhancing the prices of their mechanical labour, and of having those prices uniform—all of which was agreed on, and public notice given to that effect. The farmers, however, did not feel inclined to submit quietly to this new 'confederacy;' accordingly, meetings were called and held in several towns, at which spirited resolutions were passed, expressing their disapprobation of the combination and proceedings of the wool carders and cloth dressers; and recommending to the people to withhold their custom from all such as had conformed to the new order of things, until they had 'seen the error of their ways, and forsaken the clandestine project.' The desired effect appears to have been produced, for we observe by the late Rochester papers that several of the carders and clothiers are 'backing out,' and have advertised that they will do work on the same terms as heretofore; and that hereafter they will 'manage their affairs in their own way,' independent of their brother mechanics.

YANKEE NOTIONS.—A few days ago, the "button market" in this place (Hudson) was threatened with a "serious depression," (as commercial folks say) in consequence of the arrival of an eastern travelling merchant, who offered this, his sole commodity, at such very low prices, as to induce a number of shopkeepers to purchase a stock for years. He had barely gone, however, before it was discovered that his wares were [illegible]

CLERICAL ANECDOTES,

FROM THE EDINBURG MAGAZINE.

There are many still alive who had the pleasure of being acquainted with a dissenting Scots Clergyman, equally remarkable for his piety, guileless simplicity of heart and eccentricity of manner. To relate all the anecdotes that are told of him and to record all his bon mots that are still remembered, would fill half your Magazine. Take the following as specimens.

Living in a populous manufacturing town, he often beheld with regret, the privations to which the labouring classes were exposed, from the depressions of trade or the dearth of provisions. On an occasion of this kind, the poor had been relieved by a most abundant supply of herrings, of which the fishing had been more than usually successful. One Sunday forenoon, in public prayers, Mr. —— expressed himself thus—"Oh Lord, we desire to offer our grateful thanks unto thee, for the seasonable relief which thou hast sent to the poor of this place, from thy inexhaustible store house in the great deep, and which every day we hear called upon our streets—Fine fresh herrings—sax a penny, sax a penny!"

There is a spring as well as a neap tide, in the fluctuations of trade; and they who have been aground by the one, are ready and willing to float with the other; so was the case with the weavers in Mr. ——'s neighbourhood: trade had become uncommonly brisk: high wages were paid; and on Saturday night, like sailors after a storm, those sons of toil forgot their former privations, amidst the joys that 'ale or viler liquor' is capable of inspiring.—They had kept it up to a late or rather an early hour on Sunday morning; and at the breaking up of the party, made so much noise in the streets, as gave great offence to the serious and sober inhabitants. In his prayer after sermon in the forenoon, Mr. —— noticed their irregularity thus: "Oh Lord, while we recommend to thy fatherly care and protection, all ranks and conditions of men, we in a particular manner pray for the check-and-ticking weavers of ——. In thy wisdom and mercy be pleased to send them more sense or less siller!"

About the time when the volunteer system was introduced, a corps was raised in Mr. ——'s neighborhood; their uniforms appeared so smart, that many considered them the most genteel gala-dress, perhaps willing that their patriotism might be as conspicuous as possible. On Sunday a youthful hero of their class entered Mr. ——'s kirk; and although he could have easily found a seat, seemed to prefer standing in the passage, right in front of the minister; and with much apparent complacency, often bending his looks to his white cassimere small-clothes. After reading out the text, Mr. —— observing that the young man still kept his perpendicular position, pointed to him and called out, "tak' a seat amang the lave there, lad, an' we'll a' look at your braw breeks when the kirk skails!"

Being not only indifferent, but inattentive to dress in his own person, he had a great dislike to seeing the silly airs that a new coat or gown will sometimes inspire in a little mind; and his indignation was sure to be raised when he saw people dressing beyond their station. One Sunday afternoon, a girl who attended his kirk regularly, and who was personally known to him, came in with a new bonnet of greater magnitude and more richly ornamented than he thought befitting the wearer. He soon observed it, and pausing in the middle of his sermon, said "Look, ony o' you that's near hand there, whether my wife be sleeping; for I canna get a glint o' her for a' thae fine falderals about Jenny B—'s braw new bannet.'

Mr. HERON, a minister in New-England, when dying and leaving a family of small children; his poor wife fell a weeping, said alas! what will become of all these children? he pleasantly replied, "never fear, He that feeds the young ravens, will not starve the young Herons"—and indeed it came to pass accordingly.

Two genuine sons of Hibernia having just landed at New-York, stepped into a small grocery, in order to take a cooling draught; while the storekeeper was engaged in drawing the exhilirating beverage, one of them espied a steam boat coming down the river, not knowing what it was, he hastily stepped to the door and says to his companion, "Jammy, Jammy, just for once be after looking this way"—"Och," says the other, "Dun be exposing yourself now, it is nothing but a Grinmill afloat."

The days of good Queen Bess.—The Bishop of Ely having declined giving up to Sir Christopher Hatton, the garden and orchard of Ely House near Holborn, Queen Elizabeth wrote to him the following sprightly note:—"Proud Prelate, I understand you are backward in complying with your agreement: but I would have you to know, that I, who made you what you are, can unmake you; and if you do not forthwith fulfil your engagement, by G— I will immediately unfrock you.

"Yours as you demean yourself,
"ELIZABETH."

MECHANICAL WONDER.

THE citizens of Philadelphia went in crowds to see the Mechanical Museum when it was exhibited here, and more recently to the famous Androides of Mr. Haddock, and willingly paid for their admission; and hundreds travelled to Chesnut Hill and gave their dollar to see the ingenious contrivance of Redheffer. Who has not heard of the automaton, that could play chess, and of the other which was made to articulate words? both so celebrated in Europe. And who would not give a half eagle to see them? but all these wonders are surpassed by a piece of Mechanism now in this city, which is far more curious, splendid and surprising than any that have been exhibited for money.

This wonderful specimen of art consists in a beautiful golden bird, wrought to the life, and covered with brilliant plumage richly imitated in enamel. The beholder first sees only a superb box of gold and precious stones, ornamented with exquisite enamel paiming; from this box the bird rises, and moving his head and wings in the most natural manner, he chirps his salutation and then pours out a song as rich in melody as that of the sweetest among the feathered choir, and after entertaining the auditor with this delightful music, vanishes suddenly from sight, leaving the spectator wrapt in pleasing astonishment. And how much does it cost to see this prodigy? The best of all is, it is shown freely without cost or charge, to all those whose good fortune leads them to purchase lottery tickets, halves or quarters, at

BALM OF COLUMBIA,

An important recent Chemical discovery.

THE ladies and gentlemen of this city and elsewhere, are respectfully informed, that John Oldridge has fortunately discovered, by the power of chemistry, the grand desideratum of preventing Hair from falling off in FORTY-EIGHT HOURS. This balm will most absolutely, in the course of a short time, make the Hair grow healthy and thick. J O is well aware that many fraudulent and impositious Oils, &c. have been imposed on the public, and therefore prejudice will be severe against his discovery, until trial shall convince his patrons that such a thing exists in nature as a certain preventative against the loss of hair. This valuable balm will cause whiskers and beards to grow rapidly. No danger need be apprehended to the human system by the application of this capillary restorative. The public may rest assured that it helps nature, and is perfectly harmless.

Persons desirous of becoming agents for the sale of the Balm of Columbia, will please address the proprietor by letter, (post paid,) with a suitable reference.

Prepared and sold, at $1 a pint, or 50 cents for a half pint bottle, by JOHN OLDRIDGE, No. 55½ South Front street, and at No. 11 North Fourth street, Philadelphia.

RECOMMENDATION.

WE, the undersigned, do hereby certify, that we have, in various cases, used the Balm of Columbia, lately discovered by John Oldridge, of Philadelphia, and have found it highly serviceable not only as a preventative against the falling off of hair, but also as a restorative. We, therefore, feel assured of its excellence, and consider it valuable and well worthy the attention of the public. In testimony whereof, we have added our respective signatures, and given it our warmest recommendation.
